Preface

The constitution of the Alliance adopted provisionally for one year requires the English Editorial Board to publish the Annual Directory but the Board has not been provided with a machinery to collect the necessary data, therefore, we had to depend upon the Membership Committee of the Alliance to furnish us with the information. Since the Executive Council was not elected until quite late in the fall, the Alliance Secretary as ex-officio Chairman of the Membership Committee did not have time to print cards to be filled by every individual with the result that the data gathered together from the secretaries of the local clubs reached this office at the end of December. As the success of any compilation depends, in the main, upon the accuracy and especially upon the uniformity of the material available, we feel much handicapped in our endeavors when a bundle of kaleidoscopic charts, notes and jottings came to our hands from the other sections. Some failed to furnish Chinese names, others did not indicate membership of the Alliance, yet others gave arbitrary spelling of names thus conflicting with the self-filled card records and thereby left us on the thorns of many an embarrassing dilemma. This experience proves convincingly the absolute necessity of using the card system. In order to accentuate further the large number of omissions we have labelled them as unreturned.

We fully appreciate the difficulty under which the Membership Committee has been laboring on account of the reorganization made necessary by the formation of the National Alliance with the sections. Indeed, without their cooperation, this publication would be almost impossible.

In closing, we wish to call the attention of the Student-body to the very valuable history contributed by Mr. V. K. W. Koo, and also to acknowledge the most hearty co-operation of Mr. D. Y. Lin in compiling the records, of Mr. Y. Y. Yang in superintending the printing of the Chinese names, of Mr. S. H. Kee in editing the publication and Mr. C. K. Tsao in managing the business end of the same. For the imperfections and mistakes that must have crept in unawares, we ask for indulgence.

A Short History of the Chinese Students' Alliance in the United States

I purpose to trace here in very broad outlines the history of the movement for union among the Chinese students in the United States. The movement began about a decade ago with the formation of independent organizations in widely separated parts of the country; underwent a period of absorption of the smaller ones by the larger; brought about a confederation between the surviving alliances; and culminated in the union last summer of all Chinese students in the country into one general alliance.

With the restoration of peace after the memorable year 1900 there was reawakened in the bosoms of Chinese the craving for the new learning; and as a result, an increasing number of students, either at their own expense or with the support of their Government, began to follow up to California the track blazed by their compatriots in the preceding quarter of the century. On their arrival they found a great many Chinese students, who had been born and brought up in the United States, attending schools with only material ends in view, unfamiliar with the affairs in China, and uninterested in and unconcerned with her welfare.

To arouse a feeling of patriotism in these students, they deemed it necessary to maintain a closer relationship with them. This idea coupled with their desire to encourage one another to acquire a thorough education for service in China, led them to call for a meeting for the purpose of forming an organization. Accordingly on October 17, 1902, twenty-three students from Berkeley, Oakland and San Francisco met in the Congregational Church in the last mentioned city and organized "The Chinese Students' Alliance of America," which was the first of its kind.

The measures which the Alliance decided to be immediately carried out were; to keep a record of the names, addresses and other particulars of all Chinese students in the United States in order to facilitate correspondence with them; to collect edicts, memorials and news of special interest to students for reference or circulation among them; to establish an employment bureau to assist the needy students in obtaining positions; and to appoint qualified members to teach the mandarin language and Chinese composition, and give free tutoring aid to those members who were attending primary schools.

The Alliance, as its title would indicate, was intended to embrace all Chinese students in the United States. Its membership doubled at the end of the first year of its existence, and on March 31, 1905, it was reported by its secretary to consist of one hundred and fifteen students of both sexes, of which thirty-five per cent were residing in the Eastern States. It devoted itself to many kinds of useful work, among which may be mentioned the publication of two annuals, respectively in 1904 and 1905, the first being entirely in Chinese, and the second in English as well, under the title of "The Dragon Student."

After the appearance of the second annual the Alliance witnessed the formation by fourteen of its members at Berkeley, on August 13, 1905, for reasons not necessary to be mentioned here, of a new and independent organization known as the "Pacific Coast Chinese Students' Association," whose object "shall be to unite the Chinese students in the United States for common benefit." Under its constitution any Chinese student, regardless of sex, who was sixteen years of age, might apply for admission when introduced by one of its members. For a while this association stood side by side with the Alliance, and both elected new members from all parts of the United States.

In the meantime the spirit of union had manifested itself in Chicago. In 1903 a handful of Chinese students in that city formed "The Chinese Students' Alliance of the Middle West." Although its avowed object was to bring the Chinese students in Mid-Western States into closer contact with one another, this Alliance did not grow to any considerable size, and its membership was always limited to a smaller number in Chicago and its immediate neighborhood.

In the east the number of Chinese students had by the summer of 1903 greatly increased with the arrival of the educational missions from Kwangtung, Hupeh, Chekiang and Kiangsu Provinces. At the suggestion of those who had brought with them to the East their ideas and experience of union on the Pacific coast, the question of forming an alliance in the Atlantic States was mooted. The students being scattered, there was, however, some inevitable delay in securing concerted action. Those who resided in Ithaca apparently became impatient, for in 1904 they established "The Ithaca Chinese Students' Alliance," which entered upon its brief career with a score of members from Cornell University and the adjacent schools.

A year later, in 1905, efforts were renewed to unite the students in the East. Circulars were issued in the summer calling for a two days' convention to discuss and adopt a plan of union. On August 28, 1905, thirty-six students assembled in the Museum of the Massachusetts Agricultural College in Amherst, and organized the now well known "Chinese Students' Alliance of the Eastern States," and adopted a constitution. Officers were elected the following day. The object of the organization was declared to be three-fold: to labor for the welfare of China, to keep Chinese students in America in close touch with one another, and to promote their common interest.

It was thus clear that toward the end of 1905 there were five Chinese student organizations in the United States, though all having the same purpose in view, yet each standing apart from the rest. The problem therefore arose of uniting in closer bonds these independent bodies of Chinese students. And it was natural that the Eastern Alliance, which grew and developed with unparalleled success in membership, spirit, influence, and activity, should play the leading part in pushing the movement for union among the Chinese students in the United States to its logical consummation.

With noteworthy wisdom the officers of the Eastern Alliance first approached the Ithaca Alliance, which was the nearest at hand. As the students at Ithaca were no less desirous of becoming members of the Eastern Alliance the amalgamation was easily effected in 1906 with the understanding that those of the new recruits who had paid their dues for the year to the treasurer of the Ithaca Alliance were not to be required to pay again to that of the Eastern Alliance. Referring to this act of consolidation in his report to the second Annual Conference, August 20, 1906, the secretary of the Alliance stated: "It is especially gratifying to us that the Ithaca Alliance saw fit to unite forces with us. This is as it should be; we have the same field to cover; our aims are identical, and strength lies in union."

By a revision of the Constitution of the Eastern Alliance the term "Eastern States" was declared to include all the territory lying east of the Rocky Mountains, thus ignoring the Middle Western Alliance, which continued to linger in bare existence. To further the cause of consolidation, however, the officers of the Eastern Alliance exerted their influence to bring a conversion of the nominal alliance in Chicago into a local club. This was accomplished early in 1909. In his letter of February 23 to the Monthly announcing the act of transformation the secretary of the Chicago organization gave this explanation: "Ever since the former Middle West alliance was established six years ago, its membership has been practically limited to the few students in the city of Chicago. We realized what retarded its growth was the futile efforts on our part to gain the support of the other Chinese students in this division of the country, who seem to have a preference for the Eastern Alliance. From this fact, two sad effects have resulted. First, it has been impossible to hold an annual conference in this section of the United States, which would be more commodious and convenient for many of us over here; and secondly we have not been able to bring about great unity and more fraternal feeling between the different groups of the Middle West."

The dissolution of the old Chicago organization left the Eastern Alliance supreme in the States east of the Rocky Mountains. West of them, it will be remembered, there were the Chinese Students' Association in Berkeley and the Chinese Students' Alliance of America in San Francisco. With both of these two apparently rival organizations the Eastern Alliance co-operated in matters affecting the interest and welfare of China or the Chinese student body in the United States. With the Association the Eastern Alliance worked on the plan for the re-purchase of the Canton-Hankow Railway Concession in 1905, carried on a campaign for the relief of the sufferers from the San Francisco earthquake in 1906, and on the question of the Kiang-Che Railway Loan in 1907. It was also in co-operation with the Association that the Eastern organization published a bi-lingual annual, the third in the series in which the two institutions designated themselves as being the counterpart of each other, one in the Eastern States and the other in the West. The Association has since changed its title: it is now called "The Berkeley Chinese Students' Club," and in all respects it has the character more of a local club than anything else.

With the Alliance in San Francisco the relations were at first obscure. A great many of those who organized the Eastern Alliance in 1905 were members of the San Francisco Alliance, and when they carried out their own ideas of which in the East, they "cut loose from the parent Alliance altogether without giving formal notice" of their intentions, with the result that for a long time after they were still considered to belong to it. The situation was rendered more complicated when the Pacific Coast Chinese Students' Association with its headquarters in Berkeley began to draw upon the students in the East to enlarge its membership; and only confusion resulted when the San Francisco Alliance changed its official title to "The Pacific Coast Chinese Students' Alliance." There was a time when some students found themselves members of three organizations at once without knowing how it was done. However, as the Association gradually withdrew from the active scene, the Alliance on the Pacific Coast, which meanwhile changed its name to the "Chinese Students' Alliance of the Western States," gained ascendancy; and in recent years it was with this "Western" organization that the Eastern Alliance maintained intimate relations of communication and co-operation.

In the actual intercourse between these two organized bodies of Chinese students difficulties were not wanting. The relations between them were at most "superficial." On important questions which required the joint action of both Alliances a concurrence of opinion was not always possible, and in every case of exchange of views delay was inevitable by reason of the distance intervening between them. On one occasion when the Western Alliance sent a cablegram home in the name of both organizations without previously obtaining the consent of the Eastern Alliance there rose at once a subdued feeling of dissatisfaction in the bosoms of some of the students in the East.

Under these circumstances those who had most to do with the affairs and welfare of the two Alliances saw the necessity of placing their relations on a firmer and more practical basis. An editorial in the Monthly of December 1907, discussed the whole question with lucidity and suggested a useful though not lasting remedy. It observed that "in the constitution of each alliance there is a common statement to the effect that one aim of the organization shall be to promote the welfare of China. The similarity of this one purpose which is after all the principal one of both, offers, in our opinion, ample ground for establishing a joint council by which the two branches of the Chinese Students' Alliance, while each is not permitted to interfere with the local administration of the other, can cooperate at least in matters of common interest." It reviewed "the possible ways to which the two branches can and do resort in acting upon a question that confronts the whole student body for solution," and stated that they were "certainly not the best we can have." According to this editorial, too, "what will surpass all the present methods in simplicity and effectiveness,—and therefore what is needed,—is the one which we have already proposed—that of co-operating through the medium of a joint council whose personnel shall be the executive officers of both branches plus such other important officers as their chairman of the Board of Representatives and the editors-in-chief of the Board of Editors." In the closing paragraph it was stated: "To conclude then, we advocate the establishment of a joint council to be composed of delegates from both branches of the Students' Alliance, each of which shall be entitled to a number of votes in proportion to its membership roll, to act upon all questions concerning the welfare of China, which may be referred to it by others or taken up on its own initiative, so that whatever should be done by the students here may be done by the council promptly and effectively."

The suggestion was taken up at once by the administration of the Eastern Alliance, and negotiations were started with the officers of the Western Alliance. The latter brought up "the matter of affiliation" before their constituency, and the principle was accepted. "The only question," said the president of the Pacific Coast organization, "was how we can send representatives." To this the chief executive of the Eastern Alliance made an interesting reply: "Regarding the way of representing yourselves after your uniting with the Eastern Alliance, it seems to me advisable that you may, as some of our eastern communities do, have your local organization as usual, but transform it into a part of the Alliance. Your head may act as your representative in submitting your ideas and plans to the executive board and in deciding questions of common interest as the other representatives do."

Although the negotiations thus appeared very promising at the outset, no immediate progress was made in the direction of union beyond a bare agreement on the proposition.

Toward the summer of 1908, however, the Eastern Alliance began to push the matter a little: a committee was appointed to draw up a detailed plan for the organization and running of a joint council. Early in 1909 the Committee submitted a final draft of ten articles. This draft was adopted at the Eastern Conference held at Hamilton, in August 1909, with some modifications. A copy of the approved draft was transmitted to the Western Alliance, which accepted it in its entirety in October. The first Joint Council was organized in January, 1910.

The constitution of the Joint Council embodied nine articles with four by-laws. The object of the new organization was "to unite the various organizations of the Chinese students in America under one Joint Council, so as to bring about joint actions on matters that affect the common interests of the Chinese student body of America." Any organization of Chinese students not situated within the territory of one or more of the "Eastern States" as defined in the Constitution of the Eastern Alliance, and having fifty or more members, might be admitted into the Council by a two-thirds majority of the Council. Each organization was to be represented by its chief executive, its editor, and one councilman-at-large for every fifty of its members and one more for every additional twenty-six above fifty. The Council was to have a president, a vice-president, a secretary, and a treasurer chosen by and from among its members. The expenses were to be defrayed by the organizations represented therein, when approved by their respective authorities, in proportion to the number of their councilmen-at-large they sent. The functions of the Council were to decide and act upon questions affecting the whole student body in America: to unify the system of management in the various organizations: to promote co-operation between them; and to make an annual report on its work to the various summer Conferences.

Built on these foundations the Joint Council, it was thought, would adequately meet the long-felt need of efficient co-operation between the Eastern and Western Alliances in matters of common benefit and interest. But after a year's experiment it was seen that it, too, was unsatisfactory. Though nominally it was to top over the two Alliances, yet in reality it was merely a confederation of two equally supreme organizations. Its continued existence depended upon their continued graces. It had no revenue but what was granted it by the authorities of the two alliances: it could not safely carry out a measure entailing expenses without first consulting its constituent units for fear of their denial of financial support. Then the fact that its members were numerous and scattered all over the country rendered it both unwieldy and tardy in its proceedings. Besides, in the face of the powerful Eastern Alliance, one of its constituent organizations, which was aggressively extending its useful work in all directions with its ample means and talent and an efficient machinery of government and administration, the Council appeared almost hopeless in trying to vindicate its name. Many important enterprises of general concern, such as the publication of the Annual, the Monthly, the Directory, and the Calendar, were controlled and carried out entirely by the Eastern Alliance instead of the Council.

Realizing its own deficiencies, the Council, in the summer of 1910, recommended some amendments to its Constitution, which were duly approved by both Alliances. By these new provisions the unit of representation was changed from fifty members to one hundred a Chinese secretary was added to the board of executives, and the Monthly was placed under the direction of the Council with the larger or the largest alliance represented therein exercising the right of filling the office of editor-in-chief. The first two measures had little effect toward promoting the efficiency of the Council, while the last one only tended to leave the Monthly without effective control and supervision by any organization.

Just about the time when the matter of the supervision of the Monthly by the Council was under discussion another question was mooted which hastened the formation of the general alliance. Ever since the year of its formation the Eastern Alliance had always held its Annual Conference in some State on the Atlantic seaboard, and members residing in the Mid-West were usually prevented by distance and the consequent expensiveness of traveling to be present. On December 28, 1909, at a banquet held in Chicago by representatives from several institutions in the Middle West, a resolution was passed requesting the Purdue Club to issue circulars to ascertain if the Chinese students in that part of the country were desirous of having a Conference of their own, and, if they were, ask them to appoint for every group of five or more students one delegate to a joint committee for the purpose of arranging the Conference. It appeared that a majority of the students favored the proposal and some expressed the desire to have a separate alliance in the Middle West. The matter was soon brought to the notice of the officers of the Eastern Alliance, who found it difficult to meet the situation. Various plans were suggested for holding a Conference in the Middle West under the direction and control of the Eastern Alliance, but they were all found to be infeasible. The only alternative left to the Alliance was to consider the desirability of authorizing the formation of a separate alliance in the Mid-West by a portion of its members. Meanwhile preparations for the Mid-Western Conference went on and in August 1910, it was held at Evanston, Ill.

At the Evanston Conference attended by some hundred and twenty students the problem was warmly discussed. After rejecting the proposal of subjecting the question to a thorough investigation and another of having the Eastern Alliance hold two Conferences each year, one in the East and the other in the Middle West, the Convention took up the suggestion of organizing an independent alliance in the Mid-West. No sooner, however, had discussion been opened than a sharp difference of opinion crystallized on the proposal. Happily, before a decision was forced, some one in the assemblage moved the adoption of the "principle of having only one Alliance of Chinese Students in North America." The motion was heartily supported by all and a resolution embodying it was unanimously carried.

Here it may be permitted to digress a little to point out that the principle thus declared was not altogether new to the Eastern Alliance. As far back as August 20, 1906, its secretary for that year urged it in his report by asking, "Inasmuch as we all are students in America would it not be better to have one Alliance for the United States, with different branches in different sections of the country. As things now stand, a member from the Western Alliance is not recognized when he comes to the East. I would recommend that a system of transfer, like that of the Y. M. C. A., be introduced."

Reverting to our subject, a telegram conveying the resolution of the Evanston Conference was immediately despatched to the Eastern Conference, which was then still in session at Hartford, Conn. Since the Eastern Alliance had the day before appointed an Investigation Committee to study and report on the conditions which were for and against a Mid-Western alliance, the telegraphic message was referred to that Committee for consideration and report with the original question entrusted to it.

The Committee was composed of three ex-presidents of the Eastern Alliance and two prominent members in the Mid-West. The chairman went about and consulted each of his colleagues in person and gathered opinions from other students, especially in the Middle West and the West. There was expressed only one sentiment, and the Committee unanimously submitted a report recommending "a National Alliance with sectional managements under a central governing board."

On January 18, 1911, the President of the Eastern Alliance transmitted the report of the Committee to the Board of Representatives, recommending "for its earnest and most thorough consideration the proposition that in the place of the existing bi-alliance system imperfectly surmounted by the Joint Council, there shall be organized one and only one Chinese Students' Alliance for the whole continent of North America." The message then reviewed the practical difficulties which were experienced in the administration of Alliance affairs under the then existing arrangement and concluded with the following significant statement: "In view of these difficulties under the existing system the proposed alliance will have distinct advantages. To say nothing else, it will tend to promote directness and therefore efficiency in the administration of the affairs of the Chinese student body in this country, inasmuch as the intermediary of the alliances between the Council on the one side and the individual students on the other will be done away with. Among the student body as a whole the proposed alliance seems to promise the welding of all elements into a consolidated whole and thereby avoid any sectional jealousy that may exist now between the different divisions of students here."

On February 18, the Board returned a vote accepting the recommendation. A little later the Western Alliance likewise expressed its approval of the principle of having a single supreme organization of Chinese students in America.

The president of the Joint Council, upon receiving notice of the decisions of the two alliances, appointed an Organization Committee to make a draft constitution for the proposed alliance. The Committee was primarily a Council committee composed of three members, but in order to make the results of its labor as representative of the sentiments of the Chinese student body as possible, the President added to it two advisers from the Middle West.

On June 1, 1911, the Organization Committee submitted to the Council a complete draft of twelve articles. In an accompanying report the Committee explained "several important principles which guided the thoughts and consultations of its members" in the preparation of the instrument. "In the first place the Committee conceived it to be the wish of the student body to have a single, independent and powerful alliance of all Chinese students in the United States, free, on one hand, from the dominations of sectional prejudices, and on the other, without unduly impairing the local interests. In the hope of meeting these desires the Committee thought it wise and necessary to maintain the supremacy of the Alliance Constitution and laws supported by an independent executive body and a distinct treasury, and at the same time leave a free hand to the Sections for local government and for promotion of local interests. The powers are so distributed that both the Alliance and the Sectional bodies of government are supreme within their respective spheres.

"In order further to strengthen the foundation of the new structure the principle of proportional representation is made the basis of the composition of the executive council which is the chief body of government of the new Alliance; for the Committee believes that to admit, for instance, all the executive officers of each Section into the executive council of the Alliance would give undue influence to the smaller Sections and would tend to encourage disintegration of the larger ones. For the same reason the editorial departments of the Alliance are also to be constituted on the basis of proportional representation.

"But efficiency does not necessarily follow from sound theories. To insure efficiency, therefore, a simple machinery is provided for the enforcement of the Constitution. The definitions of powers are broad and general, leaving the details to be worked out in time as the experience may direct or dictate.

"The centralization of power and responsibility is another new feature of the Constitution herein submitted. It is true that there may be dangers of arbitrary action in such a highly consolidated system, but ample checks are provided which may be put into play whenever necessary."

The Joint Council unanimously endorsed the proposed Constitution and recommended it to the consideration of the several summer Conferences. The Eastern Alliance at its Princeton Conference, August, 1911, was the first to adopt it in its entirety; declaring its own dissolution as an alliance and reconstituting itself into the Eastern Section of the general Alliance. The Mid-Western Conference took similar action on the proposed constitution and formally organized the students in the Middle West into the Mid-Western Section. The Western Alliance followed the example of its sister organization in the East.

Thus by the concurrence of the three Conferences the Chinese Students' Alliance in the United States has come into existence.

In pursuance of its constitution the Alliance has an Executive Council composed of the chairman of the three Sections as ex-officio members and of councilmen-at-large elected by each Section, one for every group of fifty members or a fraction over twenty-five. The Council is the guardian and trustee of the interests of the Alliance; it is invested with "power to make laws, raise revenue, make appropriations, admit new members, and accept resignations." The officers of the Alliance are chosen by and from the Council and have charge of the ordinary administrative affairs. Besides, the Alliance has an independent membership and collects dues directly from its constituents. Members of the Alliance are also members of the Section in which they reside, "provided they are willing and able to produce their membership certificate on demand by the proper Sectional authorities." Sectional membership is transferrable from one section to another. Finally, it is provided in the Constitution that the Alliance shall publish the Monthly, the Annual, and the Directory.

Such are the origin and character of the general Alliance now established by and for the Chinese students in the United States. It has taken them ten years to evolve it and it seems to be the logical outcome of the movement for union which they have, with unremitting energy, initiated and advanced from stage to stage in the last decade. If they will be as earnest and enthusiastic in supporting it as they have been in bringing about its existence, there can be no doubt that it will live and grow to add to their glory and promote their welfare.
