There are 30,844 foreign students in the United States. With the exception of the 4,283 students from Canada, the largest group of foreign students are the 2,997 students from China.

During normal times practically all Chinese students had returned to China after the completion of their educational objectives. However, during recent years because of certain conditions in continental China the great majority of them have found it necessary to remain in the United States. The total, 2997, includes those who are studying during the present academic year at 511 colleges and universities. It does not include those who have completed their educational objectives but who are still in this country. It is estimated that there is an additional number of about 2400 graduates of American colleges and universities, some of whom are recent graduates and many of whom are older graduates who have returned to the United States during the last three years. China Institute made a survey of the latter group last year and has since attempted to collect more data chiefly for purposes of personnel study and vocational placement. For the time being the data of the latter group must be kept confidential.

Each year China Institute publishes a Directory of Chinese Students. As usual, such a directory has certain unavoidable defects, such as:

1. The compilation is based on the returns of the winter semester and between then and now some students have changed schools.
2. The primary source of names of Chinese students were taken from the lists in English supplied by the school authorities; sometimes errors occur due to transposition of surnames and given names.
3. New arrivals from China during the Spring semester are not included.
4. Different schools have different ways of determining the Chinese nationality, e.g., students who are born and brought up in China but who are American citizens are sometimes excluded. So are students born or brought up in China who hold non-Chinese passports.
5. Different schools have different terms in designating certain fields of stud .
6. The process of piecing together data from different sources and of minimizing the defects entails delay.

To keep the size of the Directory from being too bulky, names in Chinese are left out and each entry is kept to minimum information. Also, we can make copies available only to a limited number of individuals and organizations. However, full information is available to institutions, industries and others for purposes pertaining to scholarships, training and vocational placement.

Thanks are due to many who have helped to make this Directory, possible, particularly to Miss Mary DeWitt of the Committee on Friendly Relations and the officers of Chinese Student organizations throughout the United States.
